PHYSICIAN LEADERSHIP

YOUR NEXT STEP?

Practices and health systems need talented physician leaders; who better to help guide decision making for patients?

Preparing yourself for these leadership roles is workable, even while practicing clinical medicine. Successfully integrating practice, leadership and your personal life leads to joy.

CLEAR CONSULTS

David L. Brown M.D., FACHE (R)

“After leading physician and broader healthcare teams for more than 35 years in some of the country’s elite healthcare systems, I made a decision to share my firsthand experience on admission and academic promotion committees; and of course what I learned recruiting and growing careers for talented individuals on our teams. My experience gives me a deep desire to help you in being a successful physician - no matter where you are on your medical practice journey.”

“Any of us who have dreamed of attending medical school, and then succeeding as a physician know the hours, dedication and work involved. What is frequently overlooked is the uncertainty that accompanies so many of the decisions you are making to reach your goal. Often you turn to a peer who is pursuing the same goal, and wonder, do they really know?”

There are straightforward steps you can take to directly reach your goals, I’ve been there, I’ve helped others. Nothing brings me greater joy.
